After surprise Trump-Kim meeting, US and North Korea to reopen talks

Both leaders agreed to visit each nation "at the right time."

President Donald Trump became the first sitting U.S. president to set foot in North Korea on Sunday when he met its leader, Kim Jong Un, in the Demilitarized Zone (DMZ) between the two Koreas and agreed to resume stalled nuclear talks.

The meeting, initiated by a spur-of-the-moment tweet by Trump that Kim said took him by surprise, once again displayed the rapport between the two. But they are no closer to narrowing the gap between their positions since they walked away from their summit in February in Vietnam.

The two men shook hands warmly and expressed hopes for peace when they met for the third time in just over a year on the old Cold War frontier that for decades has symbolized the hostility between their countries, which are technically still at war.

Trump, escorted by Kim, briefly crossed a military demarcation line into the North side of the Joint Security Area (JSA), patrolled by soldiers from both Koreas.

Moments later, they returned to the southern side and joined South Korea's President Moon Jae-in for a brief chat, marking an unprecedented three-way gathering.

Trump and Kim then held a closed-door meeting for nearly an hour.

"We just had a very, very good meeting,"

Trump said after the talks. "We'll see what can happen."

He said both sides would set up teams to push forward stalled talks aimed at getting North Korea to give up its nuclear weapons, adding "speed is not the thing."

Pope Francis, making his weekly address in St. Peter's Square, praised the meeting. "I salute the protagonists, with a prayer that such a significant gesture will be a further step on the road to peace, not only on that peninsula, but for the good of the entire world," he said.

Trump and Kim met for the first time in Singapore in June last year, and agreed to improve relations and work toward the denuclearization of the Korean peninsula.

But the second summit in Hanoi broke down after the two sides failed to narrow differences between a U.S. demand for North Korea to give up its nuclear weapons and a North Korean demand for sanctions relief.

"PLENTY OF TIME"

Kim looked relaxed and smiled as he chatted with Trump amidst a throng of press photographers, aides and bodyguards.

Trump said the two leaders "moved mountains" to arrange the last-minute meeting.

"I was surprised to see you expressed an intent to meet," Kim told Trump, referring to Trump's offer for a meeting in a tweet on Saturday. Trump came to South Korea after attending a Group of 20 summit in Osaka, Japan.

"This is an expression of his willingness to leave behind the past and work toward a new future," Kim said.

Kim said it would be a great honor if Trump visited his capital of Pyongyang. The two agreed to visit each other's country "at the right time," Trump said.

"To cross that line was a great honor," Trump said, referring to his brief incursion into the North Korean side of the DMZ. "It's a great day for the world."

But there has been little sign that North Korea and the United States are any closer to narrowing differences on the nuclear issue.

U.S. Secretary of State Mike Pompeo told reporters shortly before departing South Korea that a fresh round of talks will likely happen "sometime in July" and the North's negotiators would be foreign ministry diplomats.

Democratic candidates dump on Trump over North Korea meeting

Candidates running for the 2020 Democratic presidential nomination on Sunday criticized President Donald Trump's latest overture to North Korean leader Kim Jong Un, saying the leaders' meeting lacked substance and elevated a ruthless dictator.

The Republican Trump became the first sitting U.S. president to step into North Korea on Sunday, drawing on his penchant for showmanship and surprise to pull off talks with Kim in the Demilitarized Zone that divides the two Koreas.

The meeting, at Trump's last-minute invitation, drew praise from some including Pope Francis as a step toward peace. Critics called it a publicity stunt and said Trump wasted an important symbolic move when there has been little sign that North Korea has taken meaningful steps toward denuclearization.

A number of Democrats vying to replace Trump in the White House in the 2020 election said there was nothing wrong with talking to U.S. adversaries including Kim. This round of talks however, they said, should have followed intense preparations and substantive progress by North Korea on the nuclear issue.

"Our president shouldn't be squandering American influence on photo ops and exchanging love letters with a ruthless dictator," U.S. Sen. Elizabeth Warren said in a Twitter post.

Her 2020 rival and U.S. Senate colleague Bernie Sanders did not fault Trump for meeting with Kim.

"But I don't want it simply to be a photo opportunity. The whole world's media was attracted there," Sanders said. "What's going to happen tomorrow and the next day?"

Trump has weakened the State Department at a time when Washington needs to move forward diplomatically toward peace, Sanders said. REUTERS

Millions celebrate LGBTQ pride in New York amid global fight for equality

Millions waved rainbow flags to celebrate the LGBTQ movement.

Some 150,000 parade marchers and an estimated 4 million spectators commemorated the 50th anniversary of the Stonewall uprising that triggered the modern LGBTQ movement, with corporate sponsorship and police protection that would have been unthinkable half a century ago.

Similar parades were being held around the world, with celebratory events in liberal democracies and growing fights for equality in other places.

North Macedonia held its first Gay Pride march on Saturday. In Singapore, marchers called for scrapping a law banning gay sex. In Turkey, members of Istanbul's gay and transgender community gathered for a small rally that ended with tear gas and rubber bullets on Sunday after their annual march was banned for the fifth consecutive year.

"It's hard for us today, but can you even imagine what some of these people went through in the past? There's no way to thank them other than to express ourselves fully, truly and wholeheartedly, and to lift each other up while we do it," said Josh Greenblatt, 25, an actor wearing red sunglasses, a white crop top, ripped jeans and gold-heeled boots at the New York event. Greenblatt said he found his outlandish outfit "empowering," and he had plenty of competition from revelers stripping down to the barest of essentials and celebrating New York's legalization of toplessness for women.

Former NFL quarterback Jared Lorenzen remains hospitalized in the intensive care unit, battling an infection as well as heart and kidney issues.

His family released an update on his condition late Saturday through Matt Jones of Kentucky Sports Radio.

"On Friday, June 28th Jared began playing a bigger, more important game than he's ever played before. Jared had not been feeling well for a few weeks and that finally caught up with him," the statement began.

It continued: "He is fighting with everything he has and his immediate family is by his side."

Lorenzen, 38, played four seasons at Kentucky (2000-03) and led the SEC in passing yards (3,687) as a freshman. He still holds the Wildcats' record for career passing yards with 10,354.

Despite his collegiate success, he was undrafted in 2004 and later signed with the New York Giants as a free agent, backing up Eli Manning in 2006-07. He appeared in four games, completing four passes for 28 yards.

Because of his weight, which was listed at 285 pounds in his NFL career, he was nicknamed "The Hefty Lefty." Weight continued to be an issue for him after retirement and he said it climbed to more than 500 pounds.

In 2017, he launched The Jared Lorenzen Project, a videotaped weight-loss journey. He lost about 100 pounds within the first year.

Yankees rally with 9-run inning, sweep Red Sox in London

Gary Sanchez hit a go-ahead, two-run single as part of a nine-run seventh inning as the New York Yankees rallied past the Boston Red Sox, 12-8, on Sunday for a two-game sweep in Major League Baseball's first trip to London.

Trailing 4-2 entering the seventh, the Yankees' first two men reached against Marcus Walden (6-1) before Aaron Hicks doubled to put the team within one run. Sanchez swung and missed on two straight pitches before lining to left for a 5-4 advantage.

Gio Urshela (single) and DJ LeMahieu (double) added two-run hits with the bases loaded, and two more came home on a sacrifice fly and an error as the Yankees sent 14 men to the plate in the inning to blow the game open.

But the Red Sox scored four in the eighth and had the tying run at the plate with the bases loaded and two outs when Rafael Devers grounded out to end the threat.

Yankees closer Aroldis Chapman struck out the side in the ninth in a non-save situation.

Adam Ottavino (3-2) got the win in relief as New York was victorious for the 13th time in its past 14 games. Didi Gregorius homered in the eighth to extend the Yankees' record streak of consecutive games with a home run to 31.

The Red Sox homered three times in the first inning for the first time since 1979 but were held scoreless from there until the eighth. The Boston bullpen blew its American League-leading 17th save, and the club has dropped five of its past seven games.

Boston was outscored, 29-21, as 50 combined runs mark the most in a two-game span in the Red Sox-Yankees rivalry.

'Death Valley' temps ease as Europe burns, sweats in record heat

A four-day heat wave across Western Europe that killed seven people began to ease slightly on Sunday, as temperature alerts were cut back and wildfires slowly brought under control.

Most of the fires that had broken out Spain in recent days were stabilized, but firefighters were struggling to control a blaze in the central provinces of Toledo and Madrid that had burned more than 8 square miles since Friday.

In the northeastern town of La Almunia de Dona Godina, the temperature hit a scorching 108.3 degrees Fahrenheit. But five of Spain's 50 provinces were downgraded from "extreme" weather risk, leaving just two at the highest level, with 31 on weather alert.

In France, which experienced a national record of 114.6 degrees in the south on Friday, temperatures were set to fall gradually.

In Paris, a ban imposed on older cars to counter heat-related pollution was likely to be lifted on Monday, authorities said.

Nevertheless, some 25 out of around 90 French administrative departments had restricted water use, not least for farmers.

Jerome Despey, a wine producer in France's southwestern Herault region, tweeted photos of shrivelled grapes, and complained of "wide-spread damage."

Meteorologists say a weakening of the high-level jet stream is increasingly causing weather systems to stall and leading summer temperatures to soar. Five of Europe's hottest summers in the last 500 years have happened in this century.

"A RACE AGAINST GLOBAL WARMING"
The World Meteorological Organization said this week that the European heat wave was "absolutely consistent" with extremes linked to the impact of greenhouse gas emissions.

In Frankfurt, 3,000 athletes took part in an Ironman endurance race despite the heat.

"It felt like a race against global warming — you could have fried an egg on my head," said Sebastian Kienle, who finished second in the men's race.

In the women's event, race leader Sarah True of the United States collapsed within a kilometer of the finish line of the closing marathon stage.

True, who had already completed a 3.8-kilometer swim and 185-kilometer bike ride, was carried off the course and had to be restrained by first-aid workers concerned for her well-being.

At a post-race news conference, she said she was feeling better, but did not remember the final miles of the race.

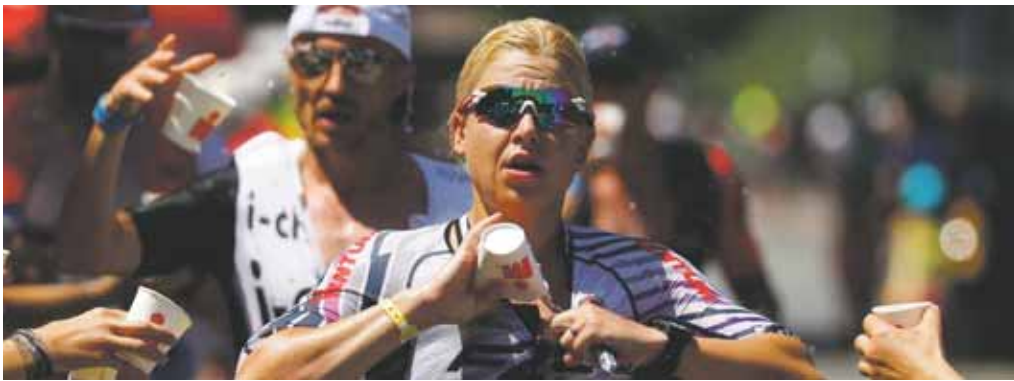

Addressing thousands of people in St. Peter's Square, Pope Francis said he was praying for those suffering most from the heat wave — the sick, the old, construction workers and those who had to labor outdoors.

"May no one be abandoned or exploited," he said.

On Saturday, one 53-year-old crashed after feeling unwell while competing in a cycling race in France's Ariège region, in the foothills of the Pyrenees, and died, local public prosecutor Laurent Dumaine said on Sunday.

The race was called off after several participants were taken sick due to the heat, organizers said.

Another cyclist died on Saturday from the effects of heat in the southern region of Vaucluse, authorities said, and at least three people died the same day in central and northern Italy. REUTERS

BETTER DRAINAGE!!!

In light of the semi-recent wet weather, my Grumble is about the apparent lack of proper water drainage in the streets. I commute to New York City daily, and it seems like every time it rains, there's always at least one curb that always seems to have a miniature lake at least a few inches deep that even reaches onto the sidewalk. Would it be too much trouble for me to not get my shoes and pant legs soaked through on my way to work?

Stacey Abrams on the state of our nation

GETTY IMAGES

The Georgia Democratic leader will be speaking at this year's OZY Festival.

PAT KING
patrick.king@metro.us

With the conclusion of the first two Democratic primary debates of the 2020 election behind us, we are now getting a clearer picture of a possible change of power in Washington. We spoke with Georgia leader Stacey Abrams, who will be speaking at this year's OZY Festival, about the rights we need to protect as American citizens given the current state of our nation and whether or not she will throw her hat into the 2020 race for the presidency.

We are currently living in one of the most politically divided times in our country's history. You will be appearing at this year's OZY festival. Tell us about your involvement and what kinds of messages you hope this festival will convey.

Well, I'm excited. This will be my first OZY Fest, but I have seen a bit about the previous ones and I'm excited to be a part of it. My work is focused on making certain that every American has full access to our democracy, because this is about power. It's about our power to shape our future, our power to participate and how our values are lived. And voter suppression, in my mind, is the strongest and most prevalent existential crisis that we face. Because our ability to make decisions about climate change, about reproductive choice, about criminal justice reform, about health care, all come back to the question of, do we have full participation in our democracy?

With today's Supreme Court decisions, we have seen a bit of a whipsaw where partisan gerrymandering will be allowed. But luckily, the citizenship question of the census won't be. And one of the conversations I hope we have is a conversation about the fact that this means every voice will count, and to an exceptional degree in 2020. That we must have every person's participation, because the decisions to be made for the next 20 years through redistricting will happen based on the census and based on our ability to elect leaders in 2020 who reflect our values and respect our choices.

It's an understatement to say that the Trump administration seems to be downplaying the threat of foreign influences on our elections. As someone who has suffered the consequences of election tampering firsthand, how important is it to make sure one of our most sacred rights as Americans remains intact?

Exactly. What we have to understand is that foreign influence has its effect, in part, because of the distance that's been created, from citizens and their ownership of their right to vote, and their ability to execute it. When you have three streams of

"My work is focused on making certain that every American has full access to our democracy."

information in an election cycle — good information, bad information and disinformation — if there isn't an active supply of good information, then either bad information or disinformation will guide the decisions made by the most vulnerable of our voters. And so, one of the joys of our campaign in 2018, for me, was being able to go into communities that have been unseen and unheard, that had been ignored by politicians and did not understand just how vital and effective they could be. We can't stop foreign influence completely. We can certainly do more to mitigate it. And I wish we had leadership in D.C., in the Republican Party in particular, that would be willing to take up the questions of election security. But, in lieu of their actions, our best defense is to have good information going to these editors. Making certain, as they know they have the right to vote, they understand what's at stake, but also that we have cleared a path within our power, which is to remove obstacles to voting by eliminating voter suppression.

The support for impeachment seems to be growing by the day. Given what we have learned from the Mueller report, do you think now is the right time to begin impeachment proceedings?

I actually do not see those as a common question. Impeachment should be based on the behavior of the president. Whether the president broke the law or not, whether he committed impeachable offenses. And that should be determined by the legislature. I support Speaker Pelosi's approach, which is to actually gather the information and the evidence necessary, to demonstrate the fullness of his ... that action, such as they may be. And so, I don't think that timing is the question. I think the real issue is making certain that we have a record that is accurate and full and complete and can withstand what will come of an attempt at impeachment. Because the reality is, you — in the legal world, you do not prosecute until you have sufficient evidence. And while the Mueller report is damning, we need full information. So we understand not only what the questions are, but what the answers are.

Do you think the conversation will change once Mueller testifies?

I think it will continue to evolve, but I think it's just as important that we watch what's happening in Chairman Nadler's committee, with the information they are seeking to secure; what's happening with Chairman Cummings and the information he's seeking to secure. The machinations of legislative bodies can sometimes seem boring and plotting, but you want the clearest pathway, and you want the deepest amount of information. Having served in a similar role for several years, I know it can sometimes feel very ... it can feel dithering to those on the outside. But I actually support the goals of our Democratic Caucus, which are to make certain in the democratic leadership, to make certain that we've asked the questions, and have the answers before we take this extraordinary step. We've only impeached two presidents in American history, and it is a critical question to me that we do this properly.

We are currently in the beginnings of the 2020 election cycle. Many people thought you would be running. Is there still a possibility?

It is. No, it's still something I'm considering. I have always said I want to. I think that certainly, the fall is the deadline for making a decision, and that is what I'm looking at. But, you know, I will say that I will run if I believe that there is value that I can add to the debate, and add to the contest, and if I believe I can win. But I am incredibly pleased with the caliber and quality of the candidates we have now, which is why I haven't thrown my name into the ring yet.

Do you think having this many candidates hurts or strengthens the Democrats' platform?

I think it's a perfectly appropriate number of candidates. We forget that in 1992, I think it was 18 candidates. In 2016, it was certainly 18 candidates. We have had larger fields, I think on the Democratic side, because we have had smaller fields, both in 2008 and 2016. We have sort of a short-term memory problem that this is not an unusual surfeit of candidate. What is different is that the debates have started earlier, and the winnowing process is different than it was, you know, a generation ago.

4 THINGS YOU NEED TO KNOW ABOUT MANDATORY BRAIN SCANS FOR FOOTBALLERS

MIGUEL VELAZQUEZ, METRO WORLD NEWS | PHOTOS: GETTY IMAGES

Starting with the 2019-20 season, all players of Germany's Bundesliga will have to undergo brain scans in order to analyze possible injuries caused by the game.

1 How can soccer players suffer a brain injury?

"Soccer players acquire concussions in collision with other players, although milder impacts such as heading the ball may also affect the brain. During these impacts, the brain accelerates/ decelerates rapidly, colliding with the interior of the skull and bruising the brain. Shear forces during the impact can also injure blood vessels and damage white matter connections deep within the brain. Although these injuries are usually microscopic in nature, they may collectively lead to problems with thinking, physical function and mood."

2 What other sports feature tests such as the ones implemented in Germany?

"We are unaware of any sporting organizations in which brain scans are a routine part of health monitoring for athletes. There are many large-scale initiatives that scan the brains of athletes following on-field injuries, particularly at the university level, but they are research-oriented and focused on understanding how the brain changes after injury, and how it recovers over time."

3 What changes could this new regulation bring?

"While a focus on brain health is warranted, there are currently no guidelines on how to integrate brain imaging into clinical management. At present, given the subtle nature of sport-related concussions, structural brain imaging may be used to 'rule out' signs of more severe injury (including brain bleeds and/or skull fracture). For more advanced brain imaging techniques, more research is needed to understand their exact role in patient management."

4 Any specific info on these types of injuries?

"We have used magnetic resonance imaging (MRI) to examine the brain during recovery from sport-related concussion. From our research, we have found that concussion involves subtle but complex changes in the brain, which require advanced imaging techniques to detect. This includes disturbed blood flow and signs of swelling in the brain, along with changes in how brain areas communicate with each other."

Metro interviewed Tom Schweizer, professor of neurosurgery at the Faculty of Medicine, University of Toronto, Canada, for this report.

Kevin Durant is headed to the Nets.

GETTY IMAGES

KD, Kyrie to Nets

NBA free agency opened in raucous fashion Sunday night, with the Nets landing the biggest fish.

MATT BURKE
matthew.burke@metro.us

The craziest free-agency period in NBA history kicked off last night with a flurry of rumors, several reports of done deals, and multiple blockbuster trades in the works.

No doubt the biggest news of the day centered around the fortunes of New York's two pro basketball teams as the Nets swooped in and stole two of the top five biggest superstars available. For several years the Knicks had targeted the summer of 2019 as the time period when they would finally land a big fish in free agency, and for several months it was thought by most fans and NBA insiders that Kevin Durant and Kyrie Irving would be headed to New York.

Well, they're headed to New York. Just not to MSG.

Durant and Kyrie Irving will sign with Brooklyn, with Durant nabbing a four-year, $164 million deal and Irving getting four years at $141 million. Brooklyn will also sign DeAndre Jordan. Durant announced his intentions on The Boardroom Instagram account, with the post: "Kevin Durant to sign with Brooklyn Nets. Kevin Durant has confirmed he will sign a max deal with the Brooklyn Nets when the free agent moratorium period ends on July 6."

A Notorious B.I.G. song played with the post. Biggie was famously born in Brooklyn.

The Nets will likely be without Durant's services during the 2019-20 season as he recovers from an Achilles tendon rupture.

Here are updates on several other key free agents as of press time.

Jimmy Butler

At the start of last weekend it seemed certain that Butler was going to be headed to Houston in a sign-and-trade, but the Miami Heat and Los Angeles Lakers have closed in during the final leg of the race to potentially land the stone-cold shooting guard.

Butler was reportedly meeting with Heat officials last night in South Florida when the free agency period opened at 6 p.m.

The Associated Press' Tim Reynolds tweeted Sunday afternoon that "Jimmy Butler is expected to tell Miami officials that he wishes to play for the Heat, per source."

ESPN's Adrian Wojnarski also reported that Butler will be traveling to Los Angeles to meet with the Rockets (and potentially the Lakers as well).

Butler declined his $19.8 million player option with the Sixers, but the team has not ruled out a sign-and-trade with another team.

Kawhi Leonard

FOX Sports' Chris Broussard tweeted out on Sunday that he was hearing "strong rumblings" that the Lakers were in the lead for Leonard. Heading into last weekend, it looked as though Leonard would either be heading back to Toronto or to the Los Angeles Clippers.

Kemba Walker

Walker will join the Celtics on a four-year, $141 million contract with the Celtics hoping he can help cure what was a dysfunctional locker room last season. Walker is regarded in most circles as a top 20-25 player, slightly below where Kyrie Irving lands on most lists. But Walker is known throughout basketball circles as an enthusiastic teammate who almost always brings locker rooms together.

Isles, Rangers on Panarin watch

While the NBA began its free-agency period in dizzying fashion on Sunday evening, the NHL adds to the madness today.

Hockey's free-agency period opens up with several big-name stars up for grabs. One of them has been linked with both New York City-area clubs as the Islanders and Rangers will be gunning for Artemi Panarin.

Alongside Matt Duchene, Panarin is one of the premier forwards available in free agency this summer. The 27-year-old is coming off one of the best seasons of his career, notching 28 goals and 59 assists for 87 points with the Columbus Blue Jackets.

It's setting the Russian talent up for a big-time payday as he could receive a seven-year contract that would see him earn anywhere between $10 million and $12 million.

As it stands, the Panarin sweepstakes are believed to be a three-team race between the Rangers, Islanders and Florida Panthers. Those three locations supposedly offer Panarin the lifestyle that he and his girlfriend — an aspiring model — are looking for.

Of those three teams, the Islanders and Panthers are currently in the best situations to acquire the left winger.

With the Rangers still needing to sign newly-acquired defenseman Jacob Trouba, they won't have enough cash to outbid any rivals for Panarin unless they clear cap space. That could come by trading the likes of Chris Kreider or Jimmy Vesey.

Artemi Panarin. GETTY IMAGES

Meanwhile, the Islanders and Panthers have at least $20 million to work with as free agency begins.

For the Islanders, Panarin would provide the team with the scoring punch they so desperately need. A lack of offense, especially on the power play, was the main reason the team was unable to advance deeper into the postseason last year.

Not only does Panarin give the Islanders that first-line winger — especially if captain Anders Lee signs elsewhere this week — but also an influential playmaker for their special teams unit.

Panarin's decision, however, could hinge on where one of his Blue Jackets teammates decides to go.

Two-time Vezina Trophy-winning goaltender Sergei Bobrovsky headlines the list of free-agent netminders available this summer. He and Panarin reportedly have a "strong desire" to play together, per CBS Miami's David Dwork.

While Panarin is leaning toward the Panthers,

Bobrovsky is feeling the influence of Islanders president and general manager Lou Lamoriello. Dwork noted that the Hall of Fame executive is having a "huge impact" on Bobrovsky's thought process.

His availability looks to be the reason why the Islanders look as though they won't be bringing back Robin Lehner, the NHL's feel-good story of the year who became a Vezina candidate after overcoming personal demons that threatened his career.

Should the Islanders miss out on both Panarin and Bobrovsky, we could see Lamoriello revisit retaining both Lee and Lehner while looking for offensive upgrades elsewhere. JOE PANTORNO
